The Everyman's Guide to Networking like a Pro

The biggest words of the 80's right along with power lunches, the power look, and power ballads were power networking. Although 'networking' has been pigeon-holed into some not-so-great categories, today we're talking about how authentic networking is about much more than just exchanging business cards and paying top dollar for a fancy martini.

Networking is the act of building relationships, connections, links, and even friendships with others. Building genuine connections and learning how to network properly can be achieved by anyone. And once mastered, these abilities will become one of the most used tools in your social skills arsenal.

Everyone's heard the saying, "It's not what you know, it's who you know" and in today's world that phrase rings truer than ever.

Whether you want to build your network for career advancement, job opportunities, sharing knowledge or just to be more social you need to start networking now.

Building real connections is not a zero-sum game. Great networkers have the ability to build quality connections and have mutually beneficial relationships by creating open lines of communication and creating an atmosphere that allows both parties to understand how they can help each other. The secret to being a successful networker comes down to one simple concept:

The best networkers build genuine relationships and give more than they receive. Forget your personal agenda. Just be open, friendly, honest & genuine and you'll do great! You may be shy or even a bit scared. Remember, it's okay to be a little awkward. Come prepared so you can handle the nerves and most of all, be authentic.

The benefits from learning to be a successful networker far outweigh any awkwardness that stems from learning the skill. It may not be easy at first. If it was, everyone would be amazing at it, but with a little bit of direction and some practice anyone can build a first rate network.

The Everyman's Guide to Networking like a Pro

The biggest words of the 80's right along with power lunches, the power look, and power ballads were power networking. Although 'networking' has been pigeon-holed into some not-so-great categories, today we're talking about how authentic networking is about much more than just exchanging business cards and paying top dollar for a fancy martini.

Networking is the act of building relationships, connections, links, and even friendships with others. Building genuine connections and learning how to network properly can be achieved by anyone. And once mastered, these abilities will become one of the most used tools in your social skills arsenal.

Everyone's heard the saying, "It's not what you know, it's who you know" and in today's world that phrase rings truer than ever.

Whether you want to build your network for career advancement, job opportunities, sharing knowledge or just to be more social you need to start networking now.

Building real connections is not a zero-sum game. Great networkers have the ability to build quality connections and have mutually beneficial relationships by creating open lines of communication and creating an atmosphere that allows both parties to understand how they can help each other. The secret to being a successful networker comes down to one simple concept:

The best networkers build genuine relationships and give more than they receive. Forget your personal agenda. Just be open, friendly, honest & genuine and you'll do great! You may be shy or even a bit scared. Remember, it's okay to be a little awkward. Come prepared so you can handle the nerves and most of all, be authentic.

The benefits from learning to be a successful networker far outweigh any awkwardness that stems from learning the skill. It may not be easy at first. If it was, everyone would be amazing at it, but with a little bit of direction and some practice anyone can build a first rate network.

That's A Wrap!
